Crispy-Skin Salmon with Lemon-Caper Brown Butter and Dijon Spinach

Skin-on salmon fillets are seared hard in a hot pan and never flipped—the top cooks by spooning the pan's hot oil over it, so the skin stays in uninterrupted contact with the metal and crisps while the flesh sets evenly. Unsalted butter browned to a nutty beurre noisette, then arrested with capers, lemon juice, and a splash of wine, becomes the sauce; shallots, garlic, and Dijon mustard wilt a pan of spinach alongside. The plate is a pool of spinach, crisp-skinned salmon, and the sauce spooned around it—never over the skin. Serves 2.

Ingredients

Salmon fillets, (6 oz.), skin-on 2
Kosher salt . . . . . 1½ tsp.
Olive oil . . . . . 2 Tbsp.
Unsalted butter . . . . . 10 Tbsp.
Capers, drained . . . . . 2 Tbsp.
Lemon juice . . . . . 3 Tbsp.
Dry white wine . . . . . ¼ cup plus 2 Tbsp.
Shallots . . . . . 1 large
Garlic cloves 2
Baby spinach, stemmed . . . . . 8 oz.
Dijon mustard . . . . . 1 Tbsp.
Fresh parsley, roughly chopped . . . . . 3 Tbsp.
Black pepper, cracked . . . . . to taste

Directions

Blot salmon dry with paper towels; keep skin-side up — Finely chop shallots and mince garlic; combine in Small Bowl #1 (spinach aromatics) — Roughly chop parsley; set aside in Small Bowl #2 (sauce finish) — Drain capers into Small Bowl #3 — Combine 2 Tbsp. white wine with 2 Tbsp. lemon juice in Small Bowl #4 (sauce liquids) — Measure ¼ cup white wine and 1 Tbsp. lemon juice for the spinach; have ready

1. Blot the salmon skin dry once more and season both sides with kosher salt (about 1½ tsp. total), sprinkling from a height so it falls in an even coat. Be generous—a bold seasoning now is what carries the fish. Set the fillets skin-side up on the board.

2. Heat a 12-inch cast iron skillet over medium-high for 3–4 minutes, until you can hold your hand a few inches above the surface for only a moment. Add olive oil to coat the base of the pan and let it heat until it shimmers and moves loosely, about 30 seconds, then lower the heat to medium. A cool pan is the one thing that ruins this dish.

3. Lay the salmon skin-side down away from you and press the fillets flat with your fingers for 15–20 seconds so the skin meets the metal across its whole surface; you will feel bubbles tickling your fingertips from inside the fish. It should sizzle hard on contact. Cook without moving for 5 minutes, until the flesh has turned opaque about a third of the way up the sides and a lifted corner of skin shows deep gold.

4. Baste the fillets without flipping them: tilt the pan toward you and spoon the pooled hot oil continuously over the top for 3–4 minutes, until the flesh is opaque throughout with no translucent pink at the thickest point (the loin side) and the centre reaches 140–145°F on an instant-read thermometer. The skin stays in contact with the pan the entire time and finishes an even, crusty deep brown—that is the point of not flipping. Transfer the salmon to a plate, skin-side up, and let it rest uncovered while you make the sauce and the spinach—about 8 minutes in all, which finishes the carryover and lets the muscle relax. Leave it uncovered; a foil tent would steam the skin you just spent the sear on.

5. Make the brown butter sauce in the same skillet. Pour off all but about 1 Tbsp. of the oil so the sauce tastes of butter rather than oil.

    (a) Add 8 Tbsp. butter and melt over medium heat, swirling. Cook 2–4 minutes until the foam subsides and the milk solids at the bottom turn nut brown and smell of hazelnuts. In a black-bottomed pan the colour is hard to read; lift a spoonful into the light to judge it.

    (b) Add capers (Small Bowl #3) and stir; the moisture in them fizzles and stops the butter browning further.

    (c) Add white wine and lemon juice (Small Bowl #4). Swirl and scrape the pan for 30 seconds; the liquid cools the fat and the sauce comes together glossy and sharp. Slide the pan off the heat and keep it warm.

6. Cook the Dijon spinach in a second large skillet.

    (a) Melt the remaining 2 Tbsp. butter over medium heat. Add shallots and garlic (Small Bowl #1) with a pinch of kosher salt straight away—the salt pulls their moisture and starts them cooking. Sweat for 2–3 minutes until fragrant and softened but not browned.

    (b) Add baby spinach with another small pinch of kosher salt. Toss with the aromatics and let it wilt in contact with the pan for 2–3 minutes; a lid speeds this but is not needed. Do not over-wilt—the leaves should be tender and dark green, not slumped.

    (c) Add 1/4 cup white wine and 1 Tbsp. Dijon mustard and stir through for 1 minute. Finish off the heat with 1 Tbsp. lemon juice and black pepper to taste. The spinach is done when it stops shrinking and holds its shape.

7. Finish and plate. Stir parsley (Small Bowl #2) into the warm—no longer hot—brown butter sauce and taste for salt; the parsley goes in last so it stays bright green. Spoon a pool of spinach onto each plate, lay a rested fillet beside it skin-side up, and spoon the caper brown butter around the plate and over the spinach, never over the skin. Draw the sauce and spinach together at the table and serve immediately.

Yield

- Serves 2 (one 6 oz. fillet each)

Equipment Required

- 12-inch cast iron or other heavy-bottomed skillet
- Second large skillet for the spinach
- Large spoon for basting
- Thin, flexible spatula
- Instant-read thermometer
- Long, sharp chef's knife and cutting board
- Plate or rack for resting the salmon
- Paper towels
- Small prep bowls (4)
- Measuring cups and spoons

Mise en Place

- Small Bowl #1 — shallots and garlic, chopped (spinach aromatics)
- Small Bowl #2 — parsley, roughly chopped (sauce finish)
- Small Bowl #3 — capers, drained
- Small Bowl #4 — 2 Tbsp. white wine combined with 2 Tbsp. lemon juice (sauce liquids)
- Measure ¼ cup white wine and 1 Tbsp. lemon juice for the spinach; have ready
- Divide the butter: 8 Tbsp. for the sauce, 2 Tbsp. for the spinach
- Stem the spinach and keep the salmon skin-side up; blot the skin dry just before it goes into the pan

Ingredient Tips

- Salmon: Skin-on and fresh matter more than species—look for a bright, shiny surface, a clean sea smell, and flesh that pushes back when pressed. Dull, gray, spongy fillets will not crisp
- Butter: Unsalted and of good quality; the butter is the sauce, so its flavour is the whole sauce
- Capers: Small nonpareil capers are the right size; rinse them for less salt and chop any oversized ones
- White wine: Dry and unoaked—Muscadet, Sauvignon Blanc, or Chablis. Avoid anything sweet
- Olive oil: A lightly flavoured or unflavoured oil works too; the searing oil is poured off before the sauce
- Spinach: Baby spinach needs only stemming; mature spinach works but stem it fully and allow 1–2 minutes more wilt time
- Garlic: Fresh whole cloves only—pre-peeled garlic is a different, flatter ingredient
- Parsley: Flat-leaf, chopped just enough to tame it; a little stem is fine

Preparation Tips

- Moisture is the enemy of crisp skin: store the salmon skin-side up in the fridge so air circulates over it, and blot it dry twice—once when portioning, once before seasoning
- Season from a height; the salt spreads in an even coat instead of landing in patches
- Never crowd the pan; two fillets in a 12-inch skillet is the maximum, and they should sizzle loudly on contact
- Press the fillets down at the start and do not flip them; the skin must stay on the metal the whole time
- Judge the brown butter by smell and colour rather than time, and be ready to arrest it with the capers and the lemon-and-wine splash the moment it turns nut brown
- Salt the shallots and garlic the moment they hit the butter; it draws their moisture and removes the raw edge without browning them
- Pull the salmon at 140–145°F and expect carryover of a few degrees while it rests. The USDA recommends 145°F for salmon; at this point the flesh is opaque throughout and still moist

Make Ahead & Storage

- Salt the salmon and hold it skin-side up, uncovered, in the fridge for up to 1 hour before cooking; the surface dries and crisps faster
- Chop the shallots, garlic, and parsley and stem the spinach up to 4 hours ahead; refrigerate
- The sauce and the spinach are best eaten immediately; the sauce separates and the spinach slumps on reheating
- Leftovers keep 1–2 days refrigerated; reheat gently—the skin will not stay crisp

Serving Suggestions

- A crusty baguette at the table to soak up the brown butter and lemon
- A cold, dry white—Chablis or Muscadet—or a light red served cool
- Roasted or smashed potatoes make a plain, absorbent partner; rice works too
